A new military thriller from a new author. This is the type of book that is right up my alley. I have been following a few new authors in this genre and have been able to read some great stories. This book has a unique spin on the deadly operator. A man seemingly going about living his life as a husband and a father is presented with a worse case scenario. The confrontation starts as you would expect but within a few heart beats things change for Red and his family. In today's world anonymity seems like a pipe dream with millions of cameras surrounding us where ever we go, always looking for the next trending video shot, or subject to make you world famous it's no wonder that soon after Red's incident the video is leaked out into the world. While in most cases this would be an annoyance and probably cause that fifteen minutes of fame we see so often, in Red's case, it is earth shattering. The forces that come for him are from a past long forgotten but will force Red to become the man he once was. Along the way, he will make a startling discovery that even to the end of the book we're not sure what the future will hold for Red and his family. The book is well written with only one little thing that tripped me up. There was a phrase "bleeding whiner" that I found odd. The only reason it did is because the author is American and none of the characters are British so it stood out. I only mention it in case the author should read this and not to highlight as a detraction from the book. It is fast paced and there are some great action scenes although, as an action junkie, I wish there had been more but it was by no means lacking.

Pretty damned good read. Spoiler alert. This one starts with Tony "Red" Harmon at Wal-Mart with his wife Lori and his three kids Penny, Jackson and Nick. Tony is tired and really doesn't want to be there but they needed to pick up school supplies and veggies. It's January and colder than hell outside and the store is very warm. Once outside Tony and his family head for their new Ford Explorer. Tony spotted the Nissan Armada that is running with no light on. He gets Lori and the kids into the Explorer and makes sure the doors are all locked. That's when three kids step out of the Armada and mosey over to him. One of them pulls a knife. They want his wallet. Tony is just about to hand it over when he thinks why should I. The next thing he knows his wife is screaming at him and he has one of the three by the hair and has been pounding his head into the concrete. His forearm is bloody and he has a snub nosed revolver stuck up against the muggers brain stem. He has no idea where the gun came from. Lori is telling him that he doesn't have to kill that one. He looks over at the Explorer, the shopping cart on its side. Tony leaps over the mess landing next to two bloody heaps. The bodies of the other muggers. His SUV has a broken rear window and glass all over the inside. The kids are scared but unhurt. Later Tony lands in the interrogation room and Detective Matt Carter questions him about his fight, the two dead muggers and the third who was wounded. Carter had seen a video of the incident and can't believe what it showed. Tony Harmon had killed two and wounded the other in three seconds. One of them had his throat ripped out. Tony doesn't remember any of it.
