Customer Reviews

Loompanics Unlimited was a publishing company started in 1975 by Michael Hoy; billing its catalog as "The Best Book Catalog in the World," they sold books on everything from drug use to lock-picking. They also published a number of interesting, informative, controversial, and sometimes infuriating and downright objectionable books. (The name, by the way, was invented by Michael Hoy because he was going to advertise in the magazine National Lampoon, so he thought "something that sounded like 'National Lampoon' ... would help the sales of the Index. Loompanics closed its doors in 2006, but other publishers such as Delta Press and Paladin Press have acquired some of their back catalog, and even reprinted some of its books. Their annual printed catalog (and its quarterly updates) always contained some interesting articles by a variety of writers, and this 1990 was the first of four collections of these articles: the other collections are Loompanics Golden Records: Articles and Features from the Best Book Catalog in the World, Loompanics Unlimited Live! in Las Vegas: Articles and Features from the Best Book Catalog in the World, and Loompanics Unlimited Conquers the Universe. This collection contains several articles by Robert Anton Wilson (e.g.
