THE DEVACHANIC PLANE OR THE HEAVEN WORLD ITS CHARACTERISTICS AND INHABITANTS (Timeless Wisdom Collection Book 448)

Synopsis

Few words are needed in sending this little book out into the world. It is the sixth of a series of Manuals designed to meet the public demand for a simple exposition of Theosophical teachings. Some have complained that our literature is at once too abstruse, too technical, and too expensive for the ordinary reader, and it is our hope, that the present series may succeed in supplying what is a very real want. Theosophy is not only for the learned; it is for all. Perhaps among those who in these little books catch their first glimpse of its teachings, there may be a few who will be led by them to penetrate more deeply into its philosophy, its science and its religion, facing its abstruser problems with the students zeal and -the neophyte's ardour. But these Manuals are not written only for the eager student, whom no initial difficulties can daunt; they are written for the busy men and women of the work-a-day world, and seek to make plain some of the great truths that render life easier to bear and death easier to face. Written by servants of the Masters who are the Elder Brothers of our race, they can have no other object than to serve our fellow-men.

The devachanic plane, or mental plane, is the third of the five great planes with which humanity is concerned. Below it are the astral and the physical, above it the buddhic and the nirvāṇic. The mental plane has seven subdivisions. The four lower of these, where some degree of illusion is still possible, are where the average human being spends his life of bliss between incarnations. The other three are formless planes, the true home of the Soul. Matter is finer, and light, sounds and colors are infinitely more vibrant and magnificent as one ascends higher and higher. The activities on the mental plane are extremely varied: pursuit of spiritual knowledge, philosophic, scientific, literary and artistic endeavors, service work, etc. After death, spiritually and intellectually advanced human beings move quickly through the astral plane before ascending to the mental plane, where they will be conscious of their resplendent surroundings and remain for a long time before returning to the physical plane to pursue their evolutionary cycle. In comparison, undeveloped human beings spend most of their afterlife in the astral, with a brief, somewhat dreamy sojourn on the mental plane before resuming the cycle of birth and death. With the exception of those that are utterly evil, everyone spends some time in the heaven world between incarnations. "In the course of his physical existence a man sets in motion by his higher thoughts and aspirations what may be described as a certain amount of spiritual force, which will react upon him when he reaches the mental plane. If there be but little of this force, it will be comparatively soon exhausted...
