Customer Reviews

As a high school English teacher, a former game-show contestant (the original "Dating Game"), and a former Disneyland Cast Member, Paul Draker had my attention from the opening pages of his book. With obvious similarities to "Lord of the Flies" by William Golding and "The Most Dangerous Game" by Richard Connell, "New Year Island" is like TV's "Survivor" on steroids. Try to imagine the ultimate reality show that pits ten real-life survivors in a winner-take-all competition, and you've got an inkling of the story's plot. Our willing, but unknowing, contestants are literally plopped on Ano Nuevo Island in the middle of the night with very little information about what lies ahead of them. Even before daybreak they realize how dangerous their new environment will be. "New Year Island" has more twists and turns than the Matterhorn Bobsleds. (Take it from someone who knows.) Mr. Draker has created a crazy cast of characters. There are so many, it would be wise to keep a scorecard close at hand so that you can keep up with who's who. The author has the same sick sense of humor that Stephen King has, and I mean that as the highest compliment. He doesn't care what he does to his characters. One of the most despicable "contestants" is Mason, and yet I laughed out loud at an off-handed comment that he makes at a moment of extreme tension. You'll find yourself cheering the heroes and hissing the villains. But don't get too attached to any one of them. When you turn the page, the unexpected may occur. I thoroughly enjoyed reading "New Year Island." But I have to admit I didn't think I could plow through 707 pages by an author that I had barely heard of. I made a commitment to it like I did when I first picked up "It" by Stephen King, and I was not disappointed.

Let me first say that my husband is a bit irked with debut novelist, Paul Draker. I took this book with me on vacation, and every time we were ready to head out someplace, he got tired of hearing, "Wait, wait...I'm at a really good spot in my book." The book grabs your attention right from the start with short flashback storylines for four of the main characters...each of them facing an intense, life-threatening ordeal. The short flashback chapters leave you with the sense that there was much more left unrevealed to the reader about each situation. Back to present time, and these same people along with six others have received invitations that are too hard to turn down. The mystery begins as the ten selected candidates board a luxury yacht to find they are the only ones aboard other than the ship's crew. A video announces the players for the two teams and provides a cursory explanation of "the game." They're then transported to a remote biological research island off the California coast where they're to be marooned for two weeks in competition for the $5,000,000 grand prize in a new reality show. Sign me up, right? Adventure and big bucks. Umm, not so fast...Once abandoned on the island, it quickly becomes obvious that things are not as the contestants expected. The most basic needs for survival become their first objective as they begin their search for shelter, food, and water. Although they have no means of contacting the outside world, they do continue to receive instructions of what is expected of them. Some days, the two teams are taxed with games of daring, ingenuity, and skill that will earn points for the individual players toward winning the 5 million. Other days, the only expectation of them is that they try to survive...
