"Dean Men's Secrets" tackles the ancient archaeological anomalies mentioned by Graham Hancock, Erich Von Daniken and the like. If you've read his books, you know the questions that are being asked. How were the pyramids built? How were stones bigger than any we can lift today with machinery carried from quarries across treacherous mountains. Why do so many religions have a story of a worldwide flood? Why are gods in "flying chariots" often mentioned in myths and legends? Is carbon dating really that accurate? Questions like these have sparked the imagination of many. Daniken pointed the finger at aliens. Jonathan Gray and his think tank of associates come up with a different theory. A very different theory. Gray suggests that there was a worldwide flood, that wiped out all mankind. There was Noah and his ark, and everything that went with it. Not only was the original world population wiped out, but a super civilization with technology beyond our own was as well. They had planes, they had ships, they had machinery, they had electricity. They may even have travelled in space. Post-flood, the descendants of Noah tried to recreate past glories, but whose memory, knowledge and lifespans soon dwindled away. Mankind used to live a lot longer. We are not becoming more intelligent, we are not evolving for the better, says Gray, we are getting worse, in accordance with Newton's second law of thermodynamics rather than Darwin's theory of Evolution. Aliens were not the giants of lore, we were! It's a Christian perspective, yes, but the very, very interesting thing is that Jonathan Gray was not a Christian when he started. At the time of writing the book, you can tell he's still trying to make sense of it as much as his readers.

First of all, the information is worth 5 stars. (original written in the eighties btw) I heard this author speak on C2C and Rense in 2003 and 2004 and was very impressed with the information he gave, so I looked for his book. At the very least his book clearly proves that there has always been contact between all the continents on the world. But it also proves that ancient men did have (at times and at certain places) knowledge of advanced physics / math and astronomy although the civilizations seemed to be smaller (compared to us, but still big) more concentrated and differently orientated than our massive, overpopulated, consumer-goods, oil based societies. Most of this knowledge was lost during some point in our history, partly through one or more natural disasters and partly through very destructive wars. This book is not really an easy read because after the first chapters it is just a steady stream of short 'points of comparison'. However, it does a marvelous job in giving people the big picture because he could put a big part of the spectrum in 1 book in this way. That is also why it is so interesting, there are few books, if any that will give you so much information in such a short amount of time. The reason I give it 4 stars is not because of the information given, but because of the sloppy finishing touch of the book: For $20,- I would expect: 1. Decent pictures. The pictures are extremely bad. 2. not too many typo's. The first chapters are filled with them. One was particularly annoying: 'Bauche map' was spelled as 'Zauche map'. I was wondering why I couldn't find anything on this map until I found the name 'bauche' further in his book. In the first 2 or 3 chapters you will notice one typo every few pages.
