This volume fills much the same niche as Mansions of Madness (Call of Cthulhu Horror Roleplaying, 1920s Era) did in its day; places for the party to end up during "breathing space" in an ongoing campaign which turn out to be none too healthy. These places can also be used as places to hold one-off games, or to host mini campaigns with a little work (I got an unbelievably long and lively 14 sessions from Coffin Rock (Deadlands Reloaded Adventure, S2P10201), which others deride as "too short", with only a modicum of effort). There are seven ghost towns described, along with the threats posed by being there. The name isn't totally honest, as these towns are inhabited, but those inhabitants are the last hangers-on in towns barely alive and there may be hidden meaning in the term "ghost town". There are a couple of Savage Tales set in various of these Ghost Towns and there is a nifty Locale Generator with which to dice-up a spur of the moment place in which to adventure. The production is the usual Deadlands:Reloaded affair, with graphic design to match the other PEG publications in the series, full color and gloss paper throughout. As with all Explorer Editions it is a perfectly bound paperback.
